TOP LOCAL STORY FALSE CONVICTION

Fulton DA's unit has 1st exoneration

Judge finds Mario Stinchcomb acted in self-defense in 2002 shooting death of Jakesha Young.

By Bill Rankin
bill.rankin@ajc.com

Mario Stinchcomb believed the truth would come out eventually. He just never thought it would take so long.

On April 14, after more than 18 years in prison, Stinchcomb walked out of custody a free man, the first person exonerated by the Fulton County District Attorney's Conviction Integrity Unit.

"It's a blessing," Stinchcomb, 40, said in an interview. "I knew one day this would be over with. I just needed someone to look at my case."

Since his release, Stinchcomb has reunited with his fiancée, Nichole Briggins, and members of his family.

"I am so happy to be out," Stinchcomb said. "This experience has been a total nightmare. I never knew when I'd see my family again."

At a 2004 trial, a jury found Stinchcomb guilty of felony murder for the Nov. 6, 2002, shooting death of Jakesha Young. Stinchcomb said that he and co-defendant Michael Woolfolk were acting in self-defense because Young was the first person to open fire.

The incident happened after Young got in an argument with Stinchcomb and then ran out of the second-story apartment to get her gun out of a car. Before her driver sped off, Young fired shots at Stinchcomb and Woolfolk, who both returned fire. The only bullet fired by Woolfolk before his gun jammed struck Young in the head, killing her.

After being convicted at trial, both Stinchcomb and Woolfolk were sentenced to life in prison.

But 14 years later, Stinchcomb's lawyers found Jamario Ford, who was driving the car when Young was shot and killed. Ford did not testify at trial because Fulton prosecutors were unable to locate him.

In a sworn statement signed March 2, 2018, Ford said that when Young got her gun out of his car, she fired once at the direction of the apartment's upstairs porch. When Ford told Young he was leaving, she got in the car and fired another shot out of the window at someone on the

LOCAL IN-DEPTH WESTSIDE APARTMENTS

Ke'avin Mincey (left), 12, gets a hug Wednesday from Mayor Keisha Lance Bottoms, who told her, "Let me know if you need anything," after the ribbon-cutting at an affordable apartment complex that's part of the Westside Future Fund's "Home on the Westside" initiative. ## Affordable complex opens on Westside Atlanta mayor, Westside Future Fund nonprofit hold ribbon-cutting.

What was once a collection of boarded-up buildings on Atlanta's Westside is now a community of affordable apartments designed for people with ties to the area.

Atlanta Mayor Keisha Lance Bottoms and the Westside Future Fund nonprofit held a ribbon-cutting ceremony Wednesday at the organization's newly renovated complex in the English Avenue neighborhood.

"This is what happens when you dream big," Bottoms said at the event. She made housing a centerpiece of her 2017 mayoral campaign and has pledged to put $1 billion in public and private funds toward affordable housing.

The 31 units at 395 James P. Brawley Drive are priced at $950 for the one-bedroom units to $1,350 for three-bedrooms. If tenants can't afford those rents, they only need to pay what they can based on their income, and the city will subsidize the rest. The city committed $2.13 million to the project over the next 20 years.

"It's been a long road for me and my kids," said Nicole Mincey, a new tenant at the complex. "I don't have to wander no more. I feel so good that my little ones have somewhere to play, call home."

The property underwent a $5.5 million renovation after the Westside Future Fund, a nonprofit focused on community revitalization, bought it in 2017. The three two-story buildings have balconies, green space, on-site laundry and Wi-Fi access, an upgrade from the old apartment complex, which was one of the largest in

DIGGING DEEPER EARTH DAY

Students' interest in environment excites researcher

She pushes awareness to prevent a repeat of Westside lead levels.

By Tim Darnell
tim.darnell@ajc.com

The Emory professor whose research led to the discovery of lead deposits in Atlanta's Westside is now sharing her passion for environmental awareness with metro area students.

Dr. Eri Saikawa is heading up the Georgia Air Quality Challenge, an experimental design challenge, in which student finalists will be announced today, on Earth Day. The students, in grades 6-12, partner with Emory's air quality network to determine the placement of sensors in communities to fill in the gaps in Georgia's air quality data.

"We want young people to understand the importance of monitoring air quality," she said. "We also hope they learn more about sources of air pollution, who may be more vulnerable, and think about ways we might mitigate pollution."

Through local and federal funding, students received access to lessons about sources of pollution, current data for Georgia and how air sensors can measure air quality. Saikawa said more than two dozen submissions came in from schools in Fulton, DeKalb, Cherokee and Atlanta.

CONTINUING COVERAGE SECRETARY OF STATE RACE

Probate judge to take on Raffensperger

T.J. Hudson resigned his Treutlen County post this week to enter race.

By Greg Bluestein
gbluestein@ajc.com

A rural judge became the latest Republican candidate to join the race to unseat Secretary of State Brad Raffensperger with a campaign that will emphasize his experience supervising local elections.

T.J. Hudson resigned as Treutlen County's probate judge this week and formally announced his race for a statewide post, joining U.S. Rep. Jody Hice and former Alpharetta Mayor David Belle Isler as candidates in the GOP primary.

"Experience matters, and I've had 17 years of election experience," Hudson said. "The chief elections officer in the state of Georgia should have this type of experience."

Hudson is a long-shot contender in a contest where even the incumbent is an underdog. Hice, a four-term congressman, entered the primary in March with former President Donald Trump's endorsement, making him the favorite to oust Raffensperger in the primary.

Trump and his allies have promised to exact revenge against Raffensperger after he rejected falsehoods about widespread election fraud and defied the then-president's demand to "find" enough votes to overturn the election.

The eventual GOP nominee is likely to face a tough Democratic challenge. State Rep. Bee Nguyen, an Atlanta Democrat and outspoken advocate for expanding voting rights, is widely expected to launch a campaign for the seat.

Hudson declined to say in an interview whether he would have backed Trump's false claims of systemic voter fraud or pushed to invalidate the outcome of the state's election, which was confirmed in three separate tallies. But he said "much could have been done better" to prepare

Consistently bleak statistics: 1,000 dead by police each year

Bill Torpy
Only In The AJC

For more than six years, The Washington Post has compiled data on fatal police shootings of civilians.

The project started after the case of Michael Brown, the 18-year-old Black man who was shot to death by an officer in Ferguson, Missouri, in August 2014. That incident kicked off protests, the Black Lives Matter movement and much debate about policing.

With the guilty verdicts Tuesday against former Minneapolis police officer Derek Chauvin in the killing of George Floyd, I decided to look into the Post's figures.

Since the start of 2015, the newspaper has published a disquieting annual tally — nearly 1,000 people are shot to death by police across the United States.

In 2015, the Post counted 993. The next year it was 960, then 986 in 2017. It was 990 in 2018, 999 the year after that, and 1,021 last year. And this year is on pace for 900-something deaths. It's almost like knowing it'll be 99 degrees in Atlanta on a mid-July afternoon.

This is despite studies to reimagine policing and President Barack Obama's Task Force on 21st Century Policing. There has been training and retraining, the implementation of body cameras on police, a rush to bring more Black and brown cops onto forces. All this and ... nada.

SOUTHWEST GEORGIA

Last defendant in meth ring bust sentenced

All 79 involved have now been convicted at the federal level.

Thomasville Times-Enterprise

ALBANY — The seventy-ninth and final defendant connected to a major methamphetamine distribution ring supplying illegal drugs across the southeastern United States has been sentenced to serve 96 months in federal prison.

Kim Wesley, 48, of Nashville, Georgia, was sentenced to prison by U.S. District Judge Leslie Gardner, to be followed by eight years of supervised release.

Wesley previously pleaded guilty to one count of distribution of methamphetamine and is one of the many defendants in the 2016 Boris Fuller methamphetamine distribution wiretap investigation. All 79 defendants have been charged, convicted and sentenced at the federal level. There is no parole in the federal system.

The Grady County Sheriff's Office and Cairo Police Department assisted in the investigation in the multi-jurisdictional case.

"It was a very long investigation," said Capt. Daniel Singletary, Grady sheriff's office chief investigator.

Grady and Cairo assisted in the monitoring of wiretapping cellphone calls and texts.

Singletary said several people were arrested and search warrants executed in Cairo and unincorporated Grady County. Moultrie was the Southwest Georgia hub of the methamphetamine operation, he added.

Methamphetamine also was coming into Grady County and Florida, Singletary said.

"Everybody was working to reach a common goal to get the drugs and drug dealers off the streets, hold them accountable," the officer said.

The investigation to bring down a significant drug trafficking organization operating from a small Southwest Georgia community began four years ago, said Peter Leary, acting Middle District U.S. Attorney.

Between May 17, 2016, and Aug. 2, 2016, state and federal search warrants authorized investigators to obtain text messages and other electronic content from relevant cellphones.

"A review of the communications revealed the known leader of the methamphetamine distribution ring, Boris Fuller, 42, of Moultrie, and his co-conspirators were distributing approximately 4 pounds of methamphetamine a week to customers in Georgia, Florida, Kentucky and South Carolina," Leary said.

The communications also showed Fuller controlled a network of couriers traveling to Atlanta to acquire bulk quantities of methamphetamine.

Fuller was sentenced Oct. 26, 2018, to serve 30 years in a federal prison, to be followed by 10 years of supervised release, after pleading guilty to conspiracy to possession with intent to distribute methamphetamine.

Leary said authorities estimate an organization of 79 individuals regulated by Fuller was responsible for the distribution of more than 20 kilograms of methamphetamine in and around Moultrie from May until November 2016.

Grady County and Cairo law enforcement agencies joined the DEA, GBI, Georgia Department of Corrections, Georgia Department of Community Supervision, Mid-South Narcotics Task Force, Colquitt, Crisp, Tift, Henry, Berrien, Cook and Leon County (Florida) sheriffs' offices, Volusia County (Florida) Bureau of Investigation and Moultrie Police Department in the investigation.

local officials for the election. "Elections officials weren't given a fair chance. There was a lack of preparation for the brand-new voting system," he said of the new voting machines that debuted in the last cycle, "and I'd do a better job of getting them prepared."

In many larger counties, full-time managers are hired to supervise elections. But in rural areas such as Treutlen, a southeast Georgia county of roughly 7,000 people, probate judges serve as the supervisor of elections and carry out other duties, such as administering wills and issuing marriage licenses.

Hudson said the broad scope of responsibilities has given him a fundamental understanding of the statewide post, which oversees Georgia's elections, grants professional licenses and maintains public records.

"I'm going to get out and let Georgians meet me and decide for themselves," Hudson said. "If they meet me, I know I'm going to be their clear choice."

Stinchcomb

porch, he said. Only after Ford sped away did he hear another gunshot and realize Young had been hit, his affidavit said.

Stinchcomb's lawyers filed an extraordinary motion for new trial based on Ford's statement, but a judge dismissed it. In June 2020, however, the Georgia Supreme Court reversed that decision.

Ford's statement "offered several facts that lend significant support to Stinchcomb's claim of self-defense," Justice Carla Wong McMillian wrote for a unanimous court.

With that in hand, Stinchcomb's lawyers approached the Conviction Integrity Unit overseen by Aimee Maxwell, who once headed the Georgia Innocence Project. The Fulton DA's office investigation culminated in an order signed last week by Superior Court Judge Shukura Millender granting Stinchcomb a new trial.

On Wednesday, during a virtual hearing, Millender signed an order dismissing the charges because Stinchcomb "acted in self-defense." He walked out of prison that day.

"This case is another example of an innocent person having to wait a long time for justice," said Leigh Schroppe, Stinchcomb's lawyer. "We are so happy that Mr. Stinchcomb has been exonerated and that he has been reunited with his loving family."

Woolfolk, the co-defendant, remains in prison, but his lawyer is trying to get a similar result, Schroppe said.

Both Stinchcomb and Schroppe praised DA Fani Willis and the office's Conviction Integrity Unit, founded in 2019. The unit is helping Stinchcomb with his transition back to society by assisting him to get a new driver's license.

"They have been the greatest," Stinchcomb said. "Ms. Willis gave me a chance when she looked into it. She saw we were telling the truth."

Stinchcomb has his sights set on getting a commercial driver's license so he can drive 18-wheelers across the country, a striking difference from being confined in a prison cell for 18-plus years.

So far, it's been quite an adjustment, he said. "I've been gone for so long, a lot of things sure have changed."

the neighborhood.

"I wish we had a picture next to us of what this looked like," Bottoms said.

The mayor said she has fond memories of the area from when she was younger, including taking ballet classes at the former John F. Kenedy Middle School in Vine City.

The new community is part of the Westside Future Fund's "Home on the Westside" initiative, which preserves affordable housing for people from Westside neighborhoods, including English Avenue, Vine City, Ashview Heights and Atlanta University Center. The nonprofit, funded by public and private philanthropic sources, previously opened 150 affordable units and has more in the pipeline.

The Westside has historically suffered from a lack of public and private investment but is now seeing a wave of new development that threatens to drive out longtime, low-income residents.

The median household income in English Avenue is about $24,000, but the typical rent in metro Atlanta is as high as $1,610 per month, according to Zillow.

"What I've learned, working on the Westside, is you have lots of hardworking families and individuals," Westside Future Fund President and CEO John Ahmann said, "but they work for lower wages, and they can't sometimes afford the market rents."
